

Table of Content

Acknowledgements	IX
PART 1
Background	1
1.1 Preface	1
Introduction	1
Albanians and the religious issue.	2
Research questions	4
Overview of thesis	4
1.2 Material and method	5
Background	5
Fieldwork	6
Presentation of primary sources: persons and institutions	14
Technicalities, transcription, translation, and terminology	30
1.3 Theoretical framework	31
Introduction	31
The Study of Religion: a few notes on the discipline	33
Communities, identities, and boundaries as symbolic constructions	35
Nations as symbols, nationalism as discourse	37
Identities and otherness	40
Myths as boundary-drawing mechanisms	42
Summary	44
1.4 Identities in context	44
Introduction	44
Communities and boundaries before Albanianism	45
Albanianism before 1912: from linguistics to independence	47
Albanianism and the Albanian state	56
From totalitarianism to anarchy and integration	75
Summary	81
PART 2
Accounting for nation and religion	83
2.1 “The past”	83
Introduction	83
The Muslim community	84

The Bektashi community	94
The Orthodox Church	96
The Catholic Church	100
Selective memories and religious divisions	109
2.2 “Religious tolerance”	115
Introduction	115
Conceptions of religious tolerance	116
On the origins of tolerance: tradition and forefathers	119
On cooperation and leaders	122
On the theological foundations for tolerance	127
Religious similarities	132
Religious tolerance as a key symbol	136
2.3 Salvation and theological differences	137
Introduction	137
Other theologies	139
Soteriological prospects	145
Religious newcomers and mission	151
Summary	155
2.4 Religious diversity in practice: family and life rituals	158
Mixed marriages	158
Cemeteries	164
Summary	165
2.5 Folk, faith, and fatherland	167
Introduction	167
The Muslim community	167
The Bektashi community	173
The Orthodox Church	177
The Catholic Church	186
Muslims and Others in “Europe” and the Balkans	191
Summary	197
2.6 Sharing the cake: space, symbols, power, and resources	200
Introduction	200
Places of worship	200
Public symbols and symbols in public places	204
Political influence and discrimination	213
Summary	215
PART 3
Myths and identities: one and many Albanianisms	219
Introduction	219
One national community: the ambiguous Albanianist template	220

Shaping the different Albanianisms	222
1 The myth of religion as apolitical	222
2 The myth of the Albanians' religious core	223
3 The myth of religious tolerance	224
4 The myth of provenance	225
5 The antemurale myth	228
6 The Skanderbeg myth	231
Continuity and change	232
Conspiracies and suffering	234
The past as a moral template	236
Rivalry and proximity	237
Albanianism reconstructed	239
Towards a new civil religion?	239
Summary	241
Epilogue. Religion, nation, and Albanianism	243
Introduction	243
The Copernican turn of Albanianism	243
Overview of thesis	244
The symbolic construction of community	246
Othering, enemy images, and conspiracy theories	247
Bibliography	249
Primary sources	249
Secondary sources	253
Index	265

Acknowledgements

In writing the PhD thesis on which this monography is based, I have received support and advice from a number of people. My greatest thanks go to my informants in Albania and to Professor Peter Bartl, who gave me the opportunity to publish this book and who has been of invaluable support. I also want to direct a special thanks to my supervisor Professor Svein Mønnesland at the University of Oslo, and to the Faculty of Humanities and the Department of Literature, Area Studies and European Languages at the University of Oslo, for the opportunity to conduct this study and for financial support for the publication at hand. I am also greatly indebted to Professor Oliver Jens Schmitt, Professor Nathalie Clayer, Professor Anne Stensvold, and Dr Ger Duijzings. Moreover, I am most grateful to my friends and colleagues who have helped me, and to all the helpful and interesting people I have met in Albania – people too numerous to mention – who have all left their impression on the thesis. I also owe a very great deal to my mother Marit and my late father Knut for their unconditional support.

September 2012

Cecilie Endresen